Audioslave

I met a man locked away for things he hadn't done, innocence on a ball and chain, he'll never feel the sun
Again on his face or roses in his hands, but when he smiled at me I could understand

If you're free you'll never see the walls, if your head is clear you'll never free fall

If you're right you'll never fear the wrong, if your head is high you'll never fear at all

There was a daughter of a man who took his life too young, she swore she'd never do the same then did just what he'd done

And a boy who's gone insane, voices in his head, no one knows what they say, now his mother's dead

If you're free you'll never see the walls, if your head is clear you'll never free fall

If you're right you'll never fear the wrong, if your head is high you'll never fear at all

There was a man who had a face that looked a lot like me, I saw him in the mirror and I fought him in the street

And when he turned away I shot him in the head, then I came to realize I had killed myself
